For this variety cryptic, we've included some elements (such as enumerations) and excluded others (such as bars that indicate where entries go). In each of 20 numbered squares, the entry or entries that provide its contents are clued as, appropriately, Contents. (Where two clues are given, one entry is across and one is down, in either order; where one clue is given, it could be either across or down.) The Discontents are entries that do not pass through any numbered boxes and are clued without any grid reference at all. If bars were included, the grid would show traditional 180° symmetry.
